Methods

- Benchmark methods utilized a standardized survey instrument that was completed by each responding organization. Individuals deemed to be most responsible for ensuring HIPAA and HITECH compliance were asked to field the instrument within their organizations
- Specific areas of the benchmark instrument includes:
 - Policies and standard operating procedures (SOPs)
 - Training, awareness
 - Downstream communications
 - Program management activities
 - Data security methods and tools
 - Compliance monitoring, assessment and audit
 - Redress and enforcement

About the benchmark sample

- Table 1 summarizes the sample response over a seven-week period ending in October 2009.
- A total of 260 organizations were selected for participation and contacted by the researcher.
- Eighty-five organizations completed the benchmark survey, but eight of these instruments were incomplete and, hence, removed from the final benchmark pool.
- A final sample of 77 organizations (30% response rate) was used in our analysis.

Concluding Comments

- Both covered entities and business associates face serious challenges in achieving substantial compliance with HIPAA privacy rule and security rule requirements.
- HIPAA leaders in both privacy and security need to do a better job in making senior management aware of their organization's current program deficiencies. Accordingly, the lack of senior level support and buy-in is one reason why many organizations are unable to obtain sufficient resources for achieving compliance goals.
- There seems to be a high level of uncertainty about what needs to be done to achieve substantial compliance. This uncertainty can lead to difficulties in allocating resources appropriately and gaining senior management support.
- Organizations need to determine specific gaps in their privacy and security compliance programs as a first step to compliance with HITECH.
- Many healthcare organizations need to be more proactive in managing compliance risk, in minimizing data breach of protected health information, and in avoiding regulatory intervention.
- While many participating organizations appear to have mature HIPAA compliance programs (especially covered entities), there is significant room for improvement especially on issues relating to risk assessment, training and policy dissemination.
