Recent enforcement trends in Asia-Pacific

The Chinese government announced in December 2013 to introduce a blacklist for pharmaceutical companies found to have paid bribes.

Close connection and cooperation between the Korean government and companies led to several corruption cases.

In July 2014, the Korean government set up a task force to fight corruption.

Enforcement initiatives in Asia-Pacific

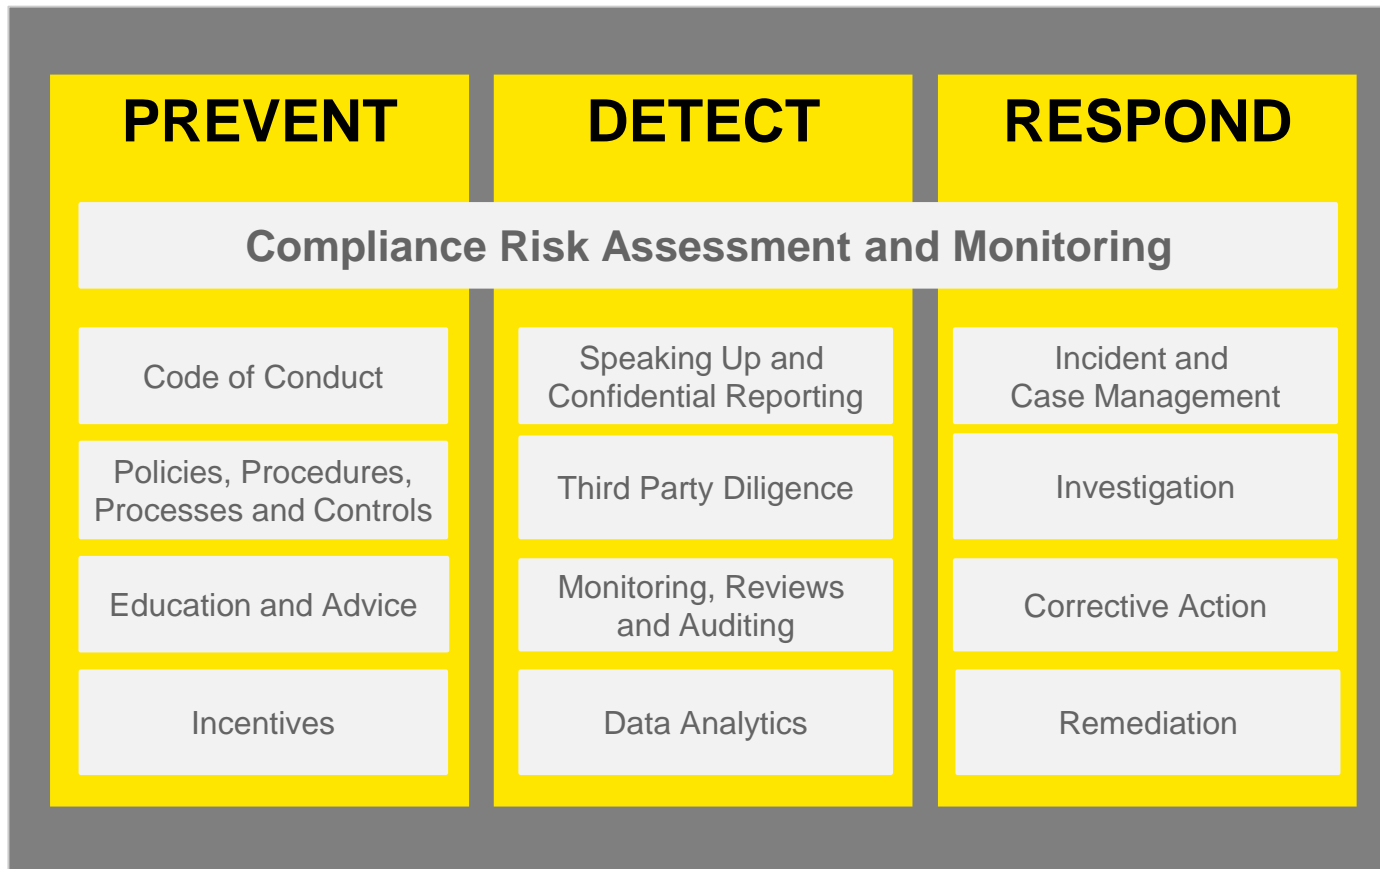

The Chinese authorities continued their crackdown on the trading of personal information. The Chinese Personal Data Protection Act is in the legislative process.

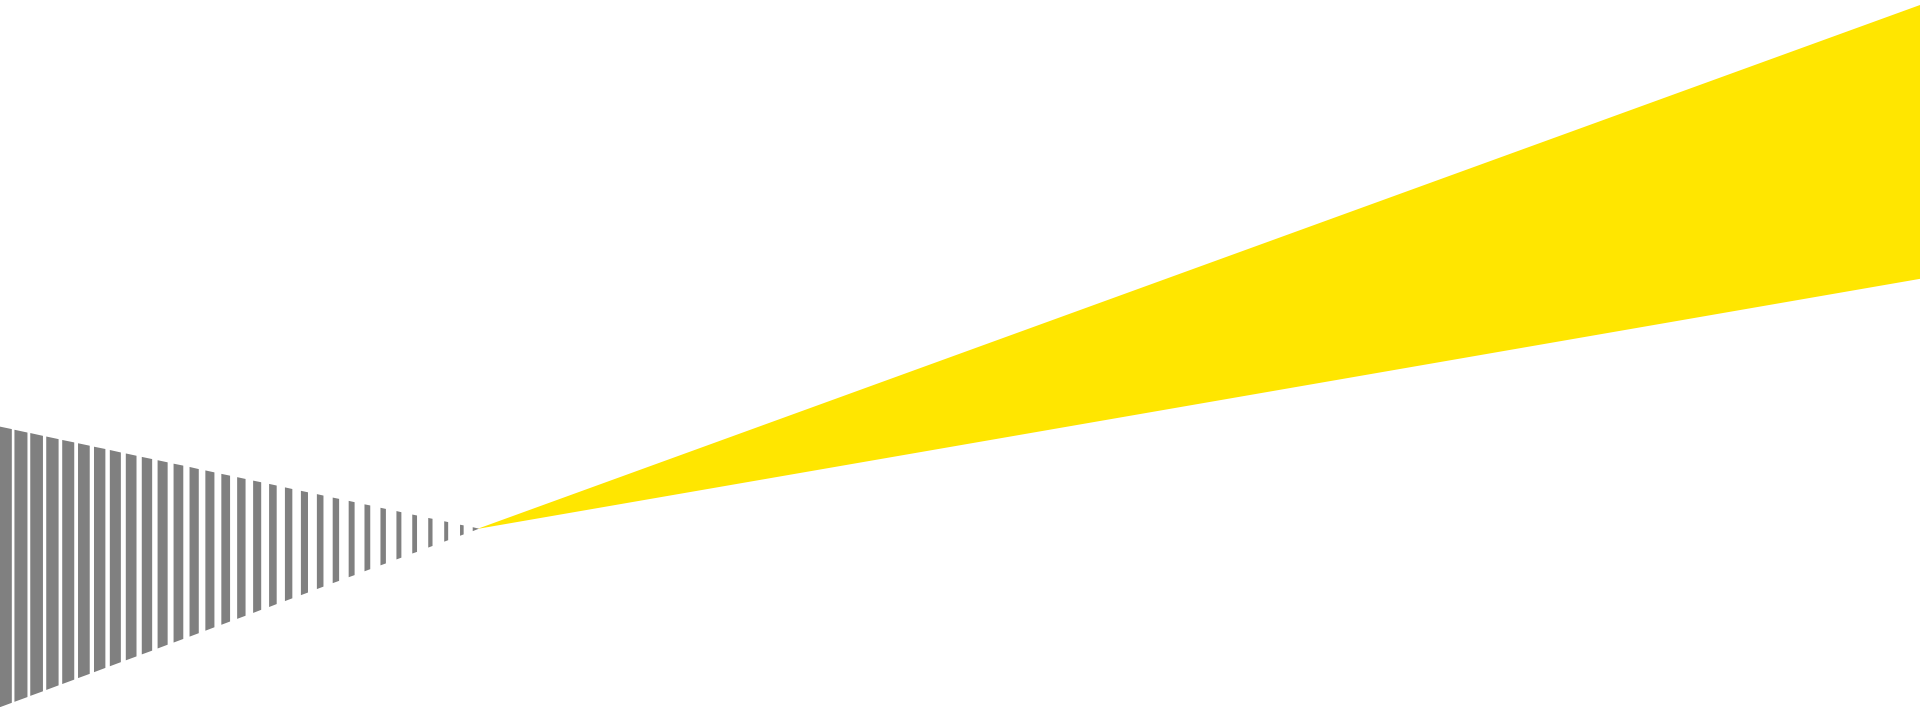

In November 2013, the US Department of Justice began to investigate the employment practices of several major investment banks in China.

How to address anti-corruption risks & issues
